Chancery and common law work with particular emphasis on professional, including medical, negligence. He also regularly undertakes serious personal injury claims, particularly those involving serious disputes between experts as to causation or in high value cases where quantification of damages raises difficult issues of principle. He has considerable experience in bringing actions against the M.O.D.

Recent Chancery and commercial activity has included an indemnity claim arising out of the sale of heavily polluted land (itself the subject of litigation in the House of Lords) and defending a claim for run off damages flowing from the sale of an off-shore telecommunications company.
